Jaén

Jaén is a natural link between the Castilian plateau and the region of Andalucia, the province of Jaén is well connected with the rest of Spain via the A-40 which joins the
A-4 (Cádiz-Madrid) to the north and the A-92 to the south (Granada and Málaga).

Its climate is softened by the Atlantic breeze which blows through the Berberia depression, creating warm summers and temperatures ranging between 6 and 8°C during the winter.

This frontier land boasts a great variety of landscapes with the extensive olive groves which produce the enormously important olive oil, as well as numerous protected natural areas, renowned towns which have been declared World Heritage Sites, valuable vestiges of the Iberian culture, and castles from the
